land,
Dives beneath the Allies' keels.
New Judge Stocks, our winsome Harry

Showed John Clark a pair of heels.
County Fair was quite a howling
And magnificent success;
If you know the Secretary—

There's a reason—you can guess.
Preachers now are on vacation
Traveling men are laying off.
Tennis Clubbers wield the racket
And at heat pretend to scoff.
Real Estaters droop and wither
Nine a. m. in they seek the shade.

Merchants keep their stores wide open,
But there's very little trade.
Politicians sail Salt River.
Re-create their seething brains.
Courts adjourned, so all the lawyers,
For the mountains board the trains.
Mighty lords of all creation
Rest exhausted frames and heads.
While women, frail and lovely,
Darn and cook and make the beds.

OTTO KUNKEL TELLS OF CONDITIONS IN GERMANY

Otto Kunkel, a former Mexico boy, now employed in the Bureau of Plant Industry in Washington, D. C., has just returned from a nine months' trip to Europe, where he has been on a traveling fellowship from Columbia University, of New York, of which he is a graduate.

During his stay abroad Mr. Kunkel visited Norway, Sweden, Holland, Switzerland and Germany. He studied in the University of Stockholm and spent some time at Frieberg, studying in the University there.

"So far as I could tell," said Mr. Kunkel, in speaking of his trip, "the business conditions of Europe at the present are abnormal. In Germany the gold coins have been called in to the Central Bank in Berlin and paper money issued their stead. The 19 pfennig pieces, which were made of nickel, have all been called in and a new issue, made of iron has been sent out. The 10 pfennig piece was used by the people of Germany in much the same way as we use our nickels. They were used extensively to operate slot machines and when the new iron ones came out all the slot machines had to be readjusted.

"I saw many wounded officers, both German and French, in Switzerland. They were kept in separate towns—the Germans in one and the French in another.

Frieberg, where I studied for some time, was only about thirty or forty miles from the Voges Mountains and we could hear the sound of the big guns most of the time. One night the town was attacked by French Airships. I was able to witness the attack in which the French aircraft dropped thirty-eight bombs in about thirty minutes. The German artillery of the city fired upon the attacking aircraft.

"Food is short in Germany, conditions in Berlin being worse than elsewhere. There they use a system of cards to feed the people. Cards are issued for bread, meat, eggs, tea, coffee and all kinds of food. These tickets are much like the meal tickets we have and are issued to people from the city hall, by some city official. They are good for a period of two weeks and the amount of food taken on from the store each time is punched on the ticket by the storekeeper. All prices in Germany are standardized by law, and one price prevails over the whole country."

When a foreigner wants to come back across the border into Germany after having left that country he must pay a fee, and Mr. Kunkel says it is his opinion, after crossing the border six times, that it is getting harder all the time either to enter or leave that country.

The Neutral Countries of Europe are very anxious to remain neutral, according to Mr. Kunkel. "I talked with an officer of Holland," he said, "and he told me that should Germany attack them they would fight and would not allow England to help them and that should England attack them they would fight and not allow Germany to help."

Mr. Kunkel saw many prisoners of war in Germany. The Russians are used more than any other people for work in the fields, and it is largely through the work done by these Russian prisoners that Germany has been able to harvest her crops this year.

Potatoes constitute the most important crop in Germany at the present time. "Without the potato," said Mr. Kunkel, "I doubt whether Germany would have been able to feed her people during the war. The agricultural methods of the European countries differ from those of America in that their farming is far more intensive than ours. Every available bit of ground is utilized and even the grain fields are hoed."

When asked his opinion as to the duration of the war, Mr. Kunkel said: "If they fight till one belligerent wins, it will last a long time, but they may come to some agreement and in that way bring peace sooner. It is my personal opinion that financial difficulties will finally cause some kind of treaty among the warring nations."

"One thing I learned," he continued, "and that is to be very neutral in my talk, for in a neutral or belligerent nation, it is not well to show any sympathy. The German people seem to feel no hatred for the French or Russians, but they do hate the English and the Italians."

"Along parts of the border between Holland and Germany the Dutch have dug trenches and placed barbed wire entanglements.

"The wounded Germans often return to the trenches several times," he said. "I met some who were returning for the third and fourth times. They come home on leave and as soon as they have recovered sufficiently they return to the front."

Despite its proximity to the front, Mr. Kunkel said Frieberg was comparatively quiet and a good place for study.

Mr. Kunkel went to Europe on a Norwegian vessel and returned in a Danish vessel, thus going all the way on a neutral ship. They had no trouble to speak of on their voyage. On the trip over, when the ship entered the war zone, in the night, all lights were either extinguished or darkened and all port holes were closed. After leaving England in the Danish vessel bound for the United States, a submarine was sighted, but it proved to be a Danish submarine which had been sent to accompany them out of the danger zone. The vessel was searched before it was allowed to leave England and the passengers were held there for a day, while this was done and the passports were examined.
